American troops are now reinforcing the British line in France, along the greater portion of which the Germans are keeping up their strong attacks with hordes of men and great concentrations of artillery in assaults that now apparently have their objective in the penetrating of the battle front in northern France and Belgium. It was a happy lot of men that swung into the sector chosen for them, and they were greeted with great enthusiasm.

From the south of Tpres in Belgium to the region of La Bassee in France the new offensive of the Germans is being carried out with great desperation, with thousands of men, under cover of unprecedented bembardments of the allied rear lings, endeavoring to pierce the bravely defended fronts held by the British and Portusuese—and now also at some unnam-

In moving the second reading of the man power bill in the house of commons today, Sir George Cave, unionist member for Surrey, said it was the duty of the country to do everything it could do, and then only should it be entitled to use to the fullest extent the help given by its allies. Germany had made Europe an armed camp, he added, and the necessity of taking every man who could be spared was overwhelming.

Sir George declared that he had been advised that the application of the man power bill to Ireland would yield a large number of men, but if only five divisions could be got from Ireland it would be worth while.

The speaker added that even if there was a lively providing

"I am absolutely confident that man for man, under equal conditions, the American soldier of today can lick any other tribe or race on the face of the globe."

In closing, the attorney general declared that the United States will fight Germany, fight her to a finish on the hills of France, or fight her to a finish in the streets of Bridgeport and Washington—fight her more than address.
